103. Treason: Preview: Release Date 04/01/07

“You see, the only reason you're not in jail is nobody here can afford to shut you up.”

“Until now?”

“Not exactly,” replied Charlotte. “This time I want you to do what you do best. Create the news.”

“This is starting to remind me of Misery. I told my fan club I only want letters.”

“That doesn't surprise me,” replied Charlotte. “Is there really someone in your fan club who can write?”

“So are we talking now about Jessica or your mythical daughter, Janise?” said Davis changing the subject. “And did Janise ever ride Puff the Magic dragon to school?”

“Sometimes. Yous see, her name was Janise Doe.”

“Hold on, I think I have Bellvue on speed dial,” said Davis picking up his phone....

Charlotte's hand caught Davis and she pushed the receiver back down. “I'm sure they can see you later,” Charlotte.replied

Are we freakin' there yet?

104. End Credits

When I set out to do this book, I had no idea how challenging it would be. I was already writing one blog a day. And I kept them to a high standard. The idea of releasing a best of to earn some extra cash seemed cool. But it also seemed wrong. Why would anyone want to pay for something I had already given away for free? My solution was an entirely new collection of work. But it's been a lot of work to get there – four months' worth.

So, in closing, I hope you have enjoyed the ride. I am deeply indebted to all my readers. For without an audience, an writer is nothing more than a the dying dream of an artisan that fades like an echo locked inside of a closed mind.

Or it's like a metaphor that makes half the people say “brilliant,” and the other half say, “WTF?”

The End
